The Citation Style

The basic makeup of the bibliography entry for SDI's citation style is the following:

Found Online = Author. "Title." Source Title. Date. URL.

For dates, try to always use the published date. However, if there is no published date, use the copyright. If neither of these are available put n.d. for no date available.

The SDI Citation Style is based on the MLA citation style. If you ever find you have a source that isn't covered below, please visit the Purdue Online Writing Lab on MLA formatting for additional resources.

If you're using a citation generator (in Microsoft Word, BibMe, or others), use MLA formatting, as this is the closest to the SDI citation style.

Below, more detailed examples are provided for a variety of source types.

In-Text Citations

When quoting from your sources in your papers, you'll be using in-text citations. These in-text citations will consist of parentheticals that contain the first piece of information from your bibliography entry (author's last name, or if not available, title of the source), as well as the date to the corresponding source, and corresponding page number if applicable. For example:

+ "Shooting a handgun accurately is much more difficult than is a rifle" (Prasac, 2021, p. 4).

 NOTE: Even when you paraphrase, you still need to include intext citations.

Bibliography

Your bibliography should contain all the sources you've used in supporting your paper. The sources should be ordered alphabetically. Indent each line of a bibliography entry besides the first. See below for examples:

Babin, Leif and Willink Jocko. Extreme Ownership: How U.S. Navy SEALs Lead and Win. October 2015. St. Martin's Press. P. 10-14.
